

Survivorship Twitter Community Guidelines

Our Twitter page is designed to represent, support and inform members of the Clinical Oncology Society of Australia (COSA), particularly those interested in survivorship. It supports members of COSA's Survivorship Group to discuss issues and develop solutions to provide quality multidisciplinary cancer care for all Australians.

This Twitter page cannot offer personal medical advice. If you need medical attention or advice please contact your doctor or local hospital.

This Twitter page is primarily for health professionals, so is unable to provide direct support or advice to cancer patients. We recommend people affected by cancer reach out to the excellent team at Cancer Council at cancer.org.au or by calling 13 11 20.

COSA relies on our members' active participation. We encourage your contributions to the page, however content is moderated to remove inappropriate posts. Swearing, abuse, racism, personal criticism, commercial advertising, some external links, unauthorised medical advice and misleading comments will be removed, and your account may be blocked from accessing COSA Survivorship's Twitter page.

COSA receives many requests from members and external groups to circulate research project questionnaires, surveys, funding opportunities and so forth. COSA will exercise discretion to ensure any opportunities distributed to our membership are appropriate and relevant, and have been subjected to the necessary institutional reviews and approvals as articulated in our Survey Policy. Read more about this process at bit.ly/3ghA91Z.

COSA staff and members of the Survivorship executive update and monitor this page. We will do our best to respond to your comments and questions as quickly as possible.
